Fostering active citizenship and entrepreneurship among young migrant women through Community Gardens

About the project

SUCCSEEDS support the social inclusion of vulnerable young migrant women by fostering entrepreneurship and active citizenship through Community Gardens, promoting their environmental awareness and personal, social and learning-to-learn skills (LifeComp).

Urban gardens may contribute to support the social integration of migrants and refugees, as they provide a safe and recreational environment where people can interact with each other (Moulin-Doos,2014). Urban gardens are gardens that exist in an urban setting, but one step further are the community gardens, which are located in public spaces or commonly held land and shared that may be individual plot gardens where each person has his/her own space in which they grow food and they personally maintain.

Five partners from Belgium, Spain, Norway, and Ireland, are working together developing the following project results:

- Training Curriculum on social inclusion and active citizenship by fostering entrepreneurship through Community Gardens -Digital Platform and online Learning Programme for youth workers and community educators
- Hands-on exercises to be used by youth workers and community educators when working with young migrant women
- Testing and evaluation trials in piloting countries
- Environmental awareness raising, beneficiaries´ increased motivation, and development of LifeComp and entrepreneurship skills.

Kickoff meeting in Tenerife, Spain

Held in November 2024, partners took advantage of this meeting to review the project scope, goals and phases, as well as to share feedback from the evaluation of the proposal. Partners also agreed to the work plan for the development of SUCCSEEDS Training Curriculum and SUCCSEEDS Digital Platform. Furthermore, the consortium established the project management plan and tools and the quality evaluation procedures.

The second meeting will be held in April 2025 in Dublin, Ireland. We will keep you updated!
